of unity - could shape South Korean politics for many years. President Chun Doo Hwan has promised to step down by early at year. That transfer of power, and the likely adoption of a new form of government, could create new opportunities for the opposition. It also could lead to even eighter control, particularly if leftist students continue to clash with

The opposition faces this crossroads increasingly divided over tactics and ideology. It is a vast and ingainly movement, comprising silver-haired politicians who vent their frustrations in the National Assembly, Roman Catholic priests trained in prison as well as the seminary, and Scoul National University students whose informal controlling includes the manufac-ture of fireforms.

The Pope's Clear Signal to Chile As in Philippines, Many See a Mandate for Democracy

By Juan de Onis

SANTIAGO - Pope John Paul Il's six-day visit to Chile, which ended Monday, has improved the Roman Catholic Church's ability to help guide the country toward a return to democracy, according to some political leaders.

The pope left clear instructions that clergy and laymen should play an active role in trying to solve Chile's "cultural, educational, social, economic and political prob-

Political leaders said that this activist role would allow the church in Chile to play a role similar to that played by the church in the Philippines, where elections led to the end of the government of President Ferdinand E. Marcos.

"The pope gave the example of the Philippines when he referred to Chile as a dictatorship in transi-tion," said Andres Zaldivar, a leader of the Christian Democratic Partv. John Paul's remarks were made in an interview last week as he was flying to South America from

Mr. Zaldivar said the pope had

"opened a space for political liberties" that should be used by political parties to mobilize support for a national campaign for free elections. He said he expected the Chilcan church to support the campaign, launched by a "committee of notables" last month.

John Paul, on his first visit to Chile, heard severe criticisms of the 13-year-old military government of General Augusto Pinochet from housewives, students and workers. The nationwide broadcasts of his public assembles gave the criticisms wider dissemination than ever before.

As he ended his visit, the pope continued to speak on the theme of national reconciliation. In a farewell speech in the presence of General Pinochet and the members of Chile's military junta, John Paul called on the government and op-position to "show the will to find solutions through dialogue, solidarity, justice and forgiveness."

But as the pope left from Antofagasta, in northern Chile, for Argentina, the next stop on his seventh Latin American trip, many in San-

BUDAPEST — A crush of shoppers navigate carts past counters piled high with sausages in the food department of the Skala cooperative store here.

Buyers cluster around bins of fresh vegetables abundant even in the depths of winter. Some grind up their own custom-mixed coffee beans while listening to the soothing tones of piped-in pop music.
The scene at Skala on a typical day is revealing when compared with that of a food store in Romania, Hungary's neighbor.

There, the dirty, dirtly lighted stores operated by the state are often devoid of meat and vegetables other than withered carrous and turnips. Coffee is unheard of. Some shops, in fact, offer only bones, but are nevertheless besieged by long lines of customers.

The shopping market gap be-tween these two Soviet allies, largely nonexistent 30 years ago, provides a quick sense of the potential significance of economic change in the Communist world. While Romania is still governed by the economic system installed by Stalin in the Soviet Union during the 1930s. Hungary since 1968 has been a pioneer in modifying that system. # Secret U.S.-Japan Pact On Nuclear Arms Found

By Richard Halloran

New York Times Service WASHINGTON - The first documentary evidence of a secret agreement permitting the United States to take nuclear arms into Japan has been uncovered by the Japanese Communist Party.

Under a "transit agreement," a confidential addition to the 1960 U.S.-Japan mutual security treaty, American warships and warplanes may carry nuclear arms into and out of Japan, but may not store them in Japan, nor launch the weapons from there.

The existence of the transit agreement has been reported in the press since 1971. In each case, however. State Department and Japanese officials, fearing a political backlash from the atomic bombings of 1945, have flatly denied that the accord had been reached. Now, the Japanese Communist Party has discovered in the Library of Congress here a microfilmed copy of a State Department tele-gram sent to the U.S. Embassy in Tokyo that clearly alludes to the agreement on nuclear arms. The telegram, dated Feb. 24, 1966, referred to "confidential arangements with U.S. on introduction of nuclear weapons under 1960 security treaty," expressing con-cern they would be undermined if Japan accepted a Soviet proposal that Japan be declared a nuclear-

William L. Givens and approved by Robert A. Fearey, who were senior officers dealing with Japan at the time, and was signed by Secretary of State Dean Rusk. The telegram was declassified from its secret status on Sept. 14, 1977. A State Department spokesman said that "we are now in the process of checking the authenticity of the document and will not comment on its content until we have done so." All Japanese governments have subscribed to what are known in Tokyo as the three nonmuclear principles, under which Japan will neither build nor acquire nuclear weapons, nor permit them to be introduced into Japan.

The 1966 telegram was written in the context of a proposal by the Soviet prime minister, Alexei N. Kosygin, that nations with nuclear arms would assure nations without nuclear arms that they would not be attacked as long as they did not acquire such weapons. In the telegram, the State Department warned the embassy that if Japan adopted the Kosygin proposal, "it is possible that the ambiguity the government of Japan has accepted on presence of nuclear weapons in U.S. vessels in Japanese ports and on transiting U.S. aircraft might no longer be accepted."

The ambiguity referred to a Japanese practice of never asking the United States whether American warships or aircraft were, in iact, of the library showed the telegram armed with nuclear weapons.

. The economy had to be made more responsive to market forces, the government spokesman, Jerzy Urban, said at a news conference in Stockholm. He is here to give a lecture at the Foreign Policy Institute on Tuesday.

Mr. Urban said that under changes to be unveiled in a few weeks, "the whole leadership of the Polish economy and its manage-ment methods will be replaced."

Private individuals would be offered shares in state companies to stimulate a new entrepreneurship, he said, and state subsidies to industry would be cut.

"This definitely means stepping out of the system of centrally subs dized industry," he said. "We shall try to cut subsidies by 15 percent this year so that the outdated and unprofitable parts of industry go bankrupt."

Mr. Urban said the planned Polish measures were convergent with changes in the Soviet Union under Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

"The role of socialism is to distribute prosperity -- not poverty,"

Mr. Urban said the government should stop managing enterprises and concentrate on conducting economic policy instead.

This week from B Introducing the Personal System/2, the Future Principle in personal computing.

We proudly present the IBM Personal System/2TN, a new family of productivity tools that will shape the future of personal computing. And it's designed to integrate technological innovations that IBM creates in the years to come.

The new family: designed for today

That's what we call the Future Principle: it makes your investment future proof. And with this new range, businesses of all sizes can afford today's most advanced technology without worrying about it becoming obsolete the day after tomorrow.

THIBM Personal System/2 is a trademark of the IBM Corporation

The basis of the Future Principle is openness, both for technological developments and vast application possibilities. The Personal System/2 connects up, to more powerful IBM computers. Down, to less sophisticated members of the family. Back, to existing IBM Personal Computers. Forward, to future IBM systems. And sideways, to outside data sources.

The Personal System/2 sets new standards of speed and storage capacity. 3.4 million instructions per second make our top models faster than many of today's personal computers. Our new 3 1/2-inch diskettes provide twice the storage space of the old standard, in a compact, durable package.

And the next step: the Future Principle in software. It's a powerful new operating system designed especially to take advantage of the Personal System/2's advanced technology. It will let you run much more sophisticated applications, yet still run current PC DOS programs.

For Errant Fundamentalists, a Hot Line

By William E. Geist New York Times Service

NEW YORK - "This is terribly upsetting," said Ginger Harney, 76, a California woman who was sending money to the TV evangelists Jim and Tammy Bakker until the scandal involving charges of adultery, hush money and drug abuse erupted. Miss Harney said she has cried herself to sleep several nights since.

She is one of thousands of fundamentalists throughout the country who are overwhelming the tiny staff of Fundamentalists Anonymous, or FA, in New York, with telephone calls and letters. The group operates from an unfinished church basement in Manhattan, wishing to keep the exact location secret because of threats, a spokesman said.

The complaints by fundamentalists --- people who believe the Scriptures are infallible and are to be taken literally - are ranging from simple disillusionment with most TV evangelists, who have been engaging in a war of words with each other, to callers claiming that fundamentalism has caused them bankruptcy, divorce and suicidal depression. One caller said her husband chained her in the basement for three months trying to get the devil out of her.

The purpose of the group, a co-founder, Richard Yao, said Friday between calls, "is to provide a place for disillusioned fundamentalists to share the trauma of breaking free."

For one thing, it is the home state of his campaign manager, Lee. Atwater, who, at least publicly, has kept his distance from the fighting. State Republicans have set their presidential primary for March 5, 1988, three days before more than a dozen Southern and border states hold primaries on what politicians are calling "super Tuesday."

"It's pretty clear the Bush people want to give him a big victory in South Carolina just before super Tuesday," said a Robertson loyals ist here. "But the way they're going about it could be a costly mistake."

The problem the Republican Party faces in trying to assimilate conservative Christians was highlighted Saturday at a Republican meeting in Richland County, which includes Columbia. Party leaders invited a local rabbi to deliver the invocation, which they acknowledged was intended to rankle the.

Caught off guard by the success of the Robertson forces in last month's election of precinct-level delegates, party regulars aligned with Mr. Bush managed to maintain control only by invoking obscure rules, which they conceded had never been enforced before, to disqualify almost 100 Robertsen

Those actions effectively deprived the Robertson camp of a majority. Of the 726 delegates seated at the county convention, ap-proximately 390 voted with the local party leadership.

The Robertson confition main-tained that both actions were in violation of election law and party rules and filed a lawsuit against the local party. A hearing has been set for Thursday. If the Robertson people prevail in the courtroom, a new convention would have to be

In South Africa, Woman Is Bearing Her Grandchildren

The Associated Press

LONDON - A South African woman is bearing in-vitro triplets belonging to her daughter and sonin-law, according to a British news-paper, The Mail on Sunday.

She is bearing the test-tube trip-lets because, during in-vitro fertilization, doctors fertilize and attempt to implant three or four eggs to increase the chances of a pregnancy. The newspaper said that in the South African case, three of the eggs had developed since they were planted three months ago.

The surrogate mother was identified as Mrs. Raymond Anthony, 48, who had agreed to bear her own grandchildren when doctors said that her daughter and son-in-law, Alcino and Karen Ferreira-Jorge, ere unable to have more children. The couple has one son.

The newspaper said Mrs. Anthony underwent the in-vitro fertilization in a Johannesburg clinic. The father's sperm and the mother's eggs were placed in a laboratory dish and the fertilized embryos were transplanted in her womb.

NEW YORK — After cleaning and restoration at the Metropolitan Museum in New York and intensive research by a Met curator, a large painting attributed simply to "Workshop of Titian" is now attributed to the great Venetian master himself.

Aside from an increase in value of "The Madonna and Child, with Female Saint and the Infant John the Baptist" from about $50,000 to millions of dollars, the process of discovery and authentication provides fresh insights into one of history's greatest artists.

. Last June the Kimbell Art Museum in Fort Worth, Texas, bought a painting that had been sold at Sotheby's in London in April 1986 for around $50,000. The picture is a variant of a Titian in the National Gallery in London. Given the tentative attribution, its dirty and disfigured condition and the lack of evidence in the catalog about previous ownership or published references, the picture passed virtually unnoticed

Gorbachev's reforms, this is one of the most telling: He has made his country exciting. It is true, of course, that what would be unworthy of note in Paris, Rio or Tokyo is stunning when coming from Moscow. Soviet life has been that sluggish. Yet this is more than mere stirring from the dormant. There is energy coming from the Soviet Union, and it has the world intrigued.

The energy animates the Soviet poet who describes publishing plans he could not have dreamed of three years ago. It stirs the Russian journalist to share an unaccus-tomed collegial joke. ("What does a cabinet minister have in common with a fly? Both can be squashed by a newspaper.") It causes an American arms negotiator to confide that his new counterparts are "just an entirely different breed."

What have the reforms meant to a Soviet newspaper editor? One answered: "Before. I always asked and was told what I could print. Now they say, you decide. So I print it and then I come to work the next morning wondering who's going to call."

The change brings Soviet filmmakers to Hollywood, there to hear U.S. counterparts confess: "The truth is, we've outstereotyped you." It brings out of the past poems that ring with long-buried injustices, films and plays that speak long-denied truths. It

Of all the things to be said of Mikhail makes East Europeans snatch up Russian newspapers. It makes the speeches of Soviet leaders readable. It makes old reporters pine to be in Moscow, and business people think about the market in Kiev.

The reforms bring Western Jewish leaders to Moscow to talk of increasing emigration. The reforms bring out of prison and out of exile men and women who work for the release of hundreds more.

The reforms bring to print in Moscow the words of émigrès whose names had been erased like those of disgraced relatives and debate over how warmly dissidents, notably Andrei Sakharov, should embrace the changes and their author.

The energy also generates Western de-bate. One commentator is held to be blind to the depth of the change, another taken in by window dressing. This scholar points to latent opposition within the Soviet Communist Party; a second points to the bureaucrats. All this opposition talk is itself a ruse, says one observer. Indeed no, responds another: If Mr. Gorbachev goes on at this rate, he will not last four years. How will it be for the West if he succeeds? ask some. How will it be if he fails? ask others.

All these questions, all this energy, all coming from a gray, leaden, predictable, controlled Soviet Union. Amazing.

Middle East Conference?

week to beat the drums for an international conference on the Arab-Israeli dispute. It is a widely discussed idea for reviving progress toward peace — a process which surged ahead while Mr. Carter was president and has gone nowhere in the Reagan years. President Carter sees a conference as something with merit in its own right and with appeal to an incumbent president who is presumably eager to record a visible dip-lomatic achievement and, in the Middle East, to move beyond Iran,

What is the argument for such an international conference? It is that the Arabs and Israelis cannot make peace directly. The Arabs resist following Egypt's state-tostate example lest once again stateless Palestinians end up left out of the play. As their price for entering the direct talks that Israel wants, they demand that talks be set in the context of a conference. The conference they seek, including Americans, Soviets, British, French and Chinese, would be empowered to deal with differences that arose in direct Arab-Israeli talks.

Israel is of two minds - that is, it is stalemated - about the conference. The Likud side is opposed to the territorial compromise demanded in return for peace, and it rejects the idea of a conference for fear that it would merely be a new forum to gang up on Israel. The Labor side is ready for territorial compromise and open to a conference, if Israel can enforce certain participation standards: to win compromises from the Soviets on the one hand and to exclude the PLO on the other. Labor, of being gauged up on, wants a conference to be not a court of appeals but merely the occasion to begin direct talks.

This account of the impediments is abbreviated, but it conveys why the prospect of such a conference is an improbability. Its adherent himself, Jimmy Carter, concedes that convening such a conference would be difficult, holding it together would be diffi-cult and producing results would be difficult. A lame duck president who already has his hands full could not be sold this project on the basis that it is a promising diplomatic tonic, or for that matter on the basis that otherwise the Middle East will explode. The Middle East will grind along.

For all its other turmoil and disaster, however, the Middle East is a region primed for serious diplomatic re-engagement by the United States. Mr. Carter pushes for an early conference opening. That seems to us far from urgent and far from being the single option available. And even though the Reagan administration is now said to be cautiously exploring the idea, it has had enough experience in unprepared or illadvised conferences by now to know that a big, failed meeting would be worse than none at all — much worse. What people in the United States and in the Middle East need to see is not that the administration is ready to buy the option that Mr. Carter favors, but rather that it has some energy and ideas of its own on resolving the terri-bly bloody tensions in the Middle East that it has not just let the whole thing slide.

No End to This War

The first U.S. combat victim in seven years of civil war in El Salvador has died in a guerrilla raid in which more than 60 government soldiers also were killed. It was a conspicuous success for the guernillas, militarily and, perhaps more, politically. Americans have tended to let the struggle in Nicaragua obscure the longer, harsher, deeper conflict in nearby El Salvador, and an incident such as the one at El Paraiso brings El Salvador back into focus.

The death of Staff Sergeant Gregory Fronius, a military adviser, seems to have been the chance result of an unusual largescale attack launched by the guerrilla command to show that it can still stay in the field against El Salvador's U.S.-equipped and U.S.-trained armed forces. What is notable, however, is not that one American was killed but that in seven years of providing aid and advice the United States has managed to stay in a support role and to do a fair job of helping Salvadorans better defend themselves. The prediction that the dispatch of a small number of advisers would lead inexorably to a Vietnam-like involvement has not come true.

The guerrillas, however, hang on, reduced but resourceful and determined to block the government's strategy of wearing them down and writing them out of El Salvador's future. Until now, anyway, their assaults on military targets have been the lesser part of their activity. The greater part is their attacks on economic targets - coffee plantations, buses, electric pylons. These attacks have inflicted heartless damage on an already staggering economy (whose latest burden is a U.S. immigration reform that may close El Salvador's emigration safety valve). The attacks have angered many Salvadoran citizens, thereby further narrowing the opposition's political appeal, souring what prospects there are for a political settlement and prolonging the war.

President José Napoleon Duarte hangs on, too. His standing in Washington as the man who brought some political reforms ensures the flow of U.S. aid that supports the anti-Communist struggle. But his very success has had the effect of widening the political space in which ever sharper challenges to him are mounted across the leval political spectrum — including challenges from the part of the spectrum that is most suspicious of trying to negotiate a political settlement. This is how his situation can get better and worse at the same time. The fact is that democracy is essential to the salvation of El Salvador, but so is an end to the war that no one knows how to stop.

Gorbachev Plays to the Right

Over the years, the Soviet Union has accorded a warm welcome to many Western visitors. But these have been the dunes, like Eleanor Roosevelt and Beatrice Webb, who caused no trouble. Margaret Thatcher did cause trouble. She told the Russian people unwelcome home truths on television. In spite of this undiplomatic behavior, her visit as a diplomatic and public triumph. Why did Mikhail Gorbachev lean so far over backward to avoid being provoked?

By all accounts Mr. Gorbachev is a very clever man; fully clever enough to under-stand that the only deals with the West that have any chance of meaning anything in the foreseeable future are those that have the support of the right. If he wants to do serious business with the West, it has to be along lines acceptable to right-wing opinion. Realistically speaking, the left does not count.

Needless to say, Mrs. Thatcher is not as powerful as Ronald Reagan. But in some ways she is more influential as the keeper of the conservative conscience. Before Irangate, this would not have been the case. As it is, she simply happens to be the most important right-wing leader around, whose good will could be crucial to the success of Russian diplomacy in the next few years. — The Sunday Telegraph (London).

Kennans and Lippmanns Are Allowed to Debate

WASHINGTON — The main foreign policy issue in America in the summer of 1947, the second summer after World War II ended, was, as it is today, how to deal with the Soviet Union. The two key debaters were intellectual giants. Arguing what might be called the hard me was George F. Kennan, then 43, chairman of the State Department's policy planning council, a talented and experienced diplomat who had already, despite his relative youth, become a wise man" adviser to America's leadership.

Under the pseudonym X, he detailed in the July 1947 issue of the Foreign Affairs what came to be known as the policy of containment. America, wrote X, should "confront the Russians with malterable counterforce at every point where they show signs of encroaching upon the interests of a peaceful and stable world."

Taking the more conciliatory side was Walter Lippmann, 58, long established as the country's premier political commentator. Mr. Lippmann argued that rather than oppose the spread of communism, Western policy should be based on making the leaders in the Kremlin feel less threatened; then they would withdraw their forces from the East European satellites. America, he argued, could ill afford the economic or moral costs of trying to contain communism's encroachments there on the periphery of the Soviet empire. Mr. Lippmann wrote 14 columns rebutting Mr. Kennan for The New York Herald Tribune.

and they were collected in a book, "The Cold

By Stuart H. Loory

War: A Study in U.S. Foreign Policy." Mr. Kennan enunciated the policy. Mr. Lippmann gave the name to the era that resulted. Although Foreign Affairs was the most important or for the discussion of foreign policy, not a word of Mr. Lippmann's argument appeared in it.

The editor, Hamilton Fish Armstrong, had banned Mr. Lippmann and his name — for a personal reason. Until June 1937, Mr. Lippmann had been a regular contributor. Indeed, Mr. Armstrong and Mr. Lippmann had been the best of friends. Then Mr. Lippmann and Mr. Arm-strong's wife, Helen, fell in love. The affair was classic. It began with a romantic dinner in the Rainbow Room atop Radio City where the formal and reserved columnist dancer with his friend's wife to tunes from a Fred Astaire-Ginger Rogers musical. The affair was discovered when four Lippmann letters to Mrs. Armstrong were mistakenly forwarded to her husband by a hotel clerk in the Austrian Alps. The man who served as arbiter of morality among nations (he had drafted eight of Woodrow Wilson's 14 points) was now in a moral dilemma. Finally, with feelings of guilt toward his wife and his best friend, he went through a divorce, as did Helen Armstrong. They married in 1938. Mr. Lippmann's biographer, Ronald Steel, says that Mr. Lippmann became a better columnist for the affair, which reignited a sense of excitement not only in his personal life but also in the political affairs of the world. Because Mr. Kennan's article soon became the intellectual underpinning for America's involvement in Vietnam and other misadventures, it would be tempting to argue that had Mr. Lin arguments not been banished from Foreign Affairs, some of that would have been avoided. Tempting, but not so. Mr. Kennan came to realize that he had overstated his case, and he became one of the severest critics of containment. Mr. Lippmann's conciliatory arguments were depreciated by the Soviet tzkeover of Czechoslovakia in 1948, less than a year after his columns appeared; indeed, for a time in the '60s he was among the most outspoken supporters of President Johnson's Vietnam policies. On this 40th anniversary of the X article, the spring issue of Foreign Affairs includes commemorative articles, including the one by X. The issue posthumously restores Mr. Lippmann to the journal's pages with excepts from his 1947 critique. Some might argue that Mr. Lippmann's exclusion paralleled censorship in Soviet journals. That is specious. One establishment journal was closed to him, but he could be seen in many other outlets. By reprinting him now, that journal reminds us that debate cannot be stifled in America.

El Salvador: The Rebels Prove They Are Still There

WASHINGTON — The attack by rebel forces on El Salvador's second-largest military base on March 31 says much about the situation in that republic. It also sheds light on attitudes and policies in Washington, where wishful thinking and short-term political considerations have replaced serious analysis with regard to Central America. There are lessons to be learned from the events at the El Paraiso base in Chalatenango Province but they probably will not be heeded.

The first and most obvious is that the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front is alive and well. By infiltrating the base and pressing the attack for several hours, killing more than 60 government soldiers and a U.S. military adviser and taking about 200 government troops prisoner, the front showed what many observers, including West European diplomats and intelligence officers, have known for some time: The insurgency has not been seriously weakened despite more than $1 billion in U.S. aid to the Salvadoran government.

It is still capable of concentrating troop strength and firepower, and doing so quietly and efficiently. Its forces move back and forth across the country, attack and withdraw easily, and keep their losses low. And, as demonstrated at El Paraiso, the front can No independent observer has reportdraw on the entire spectrum of forces available — from commandos 10 semitrained militias — in key engagements.

ing of guerrilla-held regions, together with other depopulation measures, did reduce the size of the traditional zones of guerrilla influence. But the insurgents have extended their presence to areas where they had never operated previously. The most important example of this is in the western region around Santa Ana, the country's second-largest city, where the FMLN has moved in several hundred troops, perhaps more.

The rebels have sent cadres into the capital, particularly since the earth-quake last October that devastated San Salvador. The resurgence of urban protests and the creation and growth of the National Union of Salvadoran Workers have developed hand-inhand with this "return to the cities." These new urban phenomena are not led or manipulated by the FMLN, but its cadres are deeply involved. With regard to the number of guerrillas under arms, the insurgents have had greater difficulty obtaining ammunition both from abroad and from their main source, the Salvadoran army. This has obliged them in some instances to furlough combatants and bury weapons. But this is a deliberate policy; in no way does it reflect disaffection within the rebel ranks. ed evidence of mass desertion from the guerrilla forces during the past prise; the base's perimeter, heavily fortified after a similar attack in 1983, was easily penetrated. That only eight attackers were killed indicates that the government troops hardly fought back, or did so poorly. About 200 enlisted men were killed or wounded, yet there were few officers among the casualties; it was later reported that they had hidden in a bunker. During the several hours of fighting, the 1st Military Detachment - almost 1,000 men based a few miles away — did not budge.

All this will only add to a deeper, longstanding problem affecting the army's officer corps. It has been demoralized by the guerrillas' tactic of exchanging individual captured of-ficers for dozens of political prisoners or wounded guerrillas - who, health permitting, immediately re-enter the FMLN ranks. This underscores the main obstacle that the Salvadoran military has yet to solve: An army can be indefinitely expanded at troop level, but without an officer corps it cannot win a war.

What happened to President José Napoleon Duarte's army and his American sponsors at El Paraiso is nothing but bad news. Not that they will admit it; to do so would be to admit that U.S. policy is at an impasse.

El Salvador, like Nicaragua, is an example of the Reagan administration's failed Central America policy. In less than two years, Ronald Reagan will leave office, but Daniel Ortega Saavedra will still be in charge in Managna, and the guerrillas will probably be closer to San Salvador than they were in January 1981 when Mr. Rea-foreign policy is bringing the same kind of trouble as single-interest lobbies, and for a similar reason. People in America identify a specific cause, and in frustration set our to marshal all possible forces to advance it. Modern communications and the soaring cost of political campaigns multiply the technique's effect on domestic issues. Global communication networks, which have vastly multiplied dependencies, seem to offer the same chance of results in dealing with foreign countries.

Americans feel that the United States has vast leverage, and it does. The great trade deficit means that America is providing the world's richest market to all whose hopes for prosperity rely on exports. U.S. aid is vital to scores of states even though. the United States is not nearly so generous in proportion to the wealth. it generates as are a number of small-er nations. Military power has tang-ble political impact even though it is not and seldom can be used.

Shultz is not going to Moscow to discuss Mr. Gorbachev's agenda for the climination of intermediate-range nuclear missiles. Ronald Reagan set that agenda five years soo with precisely lem is sharpened enough, the United States could impose an honorable so hution. But it is an illusion. It is easy enough to set a priority

- fight drug trafficking block the proliferation of nuclear weapons states, fight terrorism, contain communism demand respect for human rights. All of these are important American goals. When the United States makes up its mind to pursue one of them, it can use pressure. The trouble is that the world is not divided up by single issues but by nation-states, each with its own com-plex internal balances. The goals overlap and even contradict each other in the real societies with which the United States must deal, and American also be contradictory. Pakistan is a prime example. To start with a simpler case than current concern over its effort to build an. atom bomb, there was a period last year when a tribal rebellion threatened in the north. Moscow was interested, and hinted that Islamabad had better come to terms quickly on Afghanistan in order to deal with it.

But Pakistani officials found that end of an era" you can usually be sure the clan leader's real grievance was not so much separatism as fury at having his lucrative drug trade cut off had demanded. The situation was eased by buying him off. Not pretty, but American sid must also serve-

American purposes. _____
The muclear issue is more difficult.-Pakistan is going for a bomb, and some in the U.S. Congress insist that American law requiring an end to aid unless Pakistan halts its program should be supplemented. But that would inevitably mean ending the es io aig conceding Afghanistan to Soviet dominion, with long-term implications for the whole uneasy region. The reason Pakistan wants the bomb is because India has demonstrated that it can built them. It has offered all kinds of inspection guarantees not to go ahead if India would do the same. India refuses, but not because it is afraid of Pakistan "We" could overrun them any day," a se-nior aide to Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi said flatly not long ago. Nor is India's basic motive really

The United States has little influence on India because of India's ties with the Soviet Union.

Moscow and Washington do have a mutual interest in preventing nuclear spread in the area. But their other conflicting interests make it impossi-ble to combine their pressures for nonproliferation in the existing climate. So the Reagan administration is trying to slow the Pakistanis and fend off Congress for another two years, in hope that time bought will bring an Afghan settlement and ease the dilemma. Nobody pretends that this would resolve the nuclear question.

Sorkow Delivered the Baby And Savaged Her Mother

His logic was flawed, his sense of mercy nonexistent. He used his power not only to take a child away from its mother, but to keep them from ever seeing each other again. He denonnced the mother needlessly and brutally.

get no public attention The lawyers know they may be appearing before that judge again one day. So they swallow it, and judges who humiliate the helpless before them get away with it. Their arrogance grows.

In the courtroom, Judge Sorkow made his distaste for Mrs. Whitehead plain. Ruling against her was one thing. but he used the power of the bench as a brand against her. She was a party in a custody case, not a criminal He should not have added public humiliation to personal loss.

Even lawyers not opposed to surrogacy were startled by the construction of the judge's decision. He said that the surrogacy contract was totally valid, without dealing with a central issue: Contract laws never envisioned surrogacy mother-hood. Can they be extended to cover it without appropriate legislation?

At the same time, the judge insisted that the key to the case was the welfare

Protect the Gift of Surrogacy

There is a good ethical argument in favor of a woman's right to have a beby for someone else. It has probably gone on privately for centuries - sisters have had babies for each other, and so have close friends. It is in the nature of the "gift relationship," done by one person for the benefit of another or others. When trust prevails on all sides, rather than contracts and cash on the table, a surrogate mother can confer the greatest of benefits on a childless couple. Let nobody stop her.

Rabbi Julia Neuberger, writing in The Sunday Times (London).

If there was not much logic, there was plenty of motive. The judge not only wanted to give the father and his wife custody but to refuse Mrs. Whitehead visitation rights -- to "terminate" her. Under the law he would have had to have found that she had abused or abandoned the baby, which he could not do. He decided that the surrogacy contract provided for termination and was legal. He turned the baby over to the father, terminated Mrs. Whitehead and then played his ace.

He called William and Elizabeth Stern into his chambers and within minutes rammed through an adoption process that normally takes weeks or months. The purpose plainly was to make Mrs. Whitehead's position even more difficult, Mrs. Whitehead's lawyer says he was not even informed of what was going on in the judge's chambers.

Appeals judges will find little in the record on an issue that might have undercut the judge's elegant philosophy that a "deal is a deal" no matter what. That issue is the changes in a woman's body and mind during pregnancy that bind her to the baby and could make any prenatal agreement to give the baby away suddenly horrifying. The defense counsel says the judge would not permit expert opinion on that subject.

A surrogate mother, like a pregnant woman planning to give up a child for adoption, should be allowed a grace period to change her mind.

That might cause sorrow to the father, about the idea. That is exactly the point. In the absence of legislation, the judge should have said that in decency he was unable to make a drastic decision. He could have ordered some form of shared

For a while I was worried. I feared that the Tower commission might force Americans to confront some uncomfortable questions, such as: Why, if U.S. foreign policy goals are moral, must the executors of the policies construct a labyrinth of lies to cover their activities? What is there about the perceived critical faculties and attention span of Americans that emboldened Messrs. Reagan, Regan, Casey, North, Poin-

French patriotism and promotion sparked the 25-day tour, which probably needs a bit of explaining. After Lindbergh's cp-

To reciprocate for the American hospitality shown to the fliers, the French government invited the host mayors and their wives on a 25-day tour of France, ending in Paris.

INTERNATIONAL STOCK MARKETS

In Taiwan, Everything That By Loans Goes Up, Keeps Going Up

By PATRICK L. SMITH International Kerald Tribune

AIPEI — Everyone who watches this small, hyperactive market has been asking the same question of late: When will the current rally end? Since the beginning of the year, the Taiwan Stock Exchange index has headed toward heaven as if Chuck Yeager, the high-altitude test pilot, were somehow at the controls.

No nosebleeds have been reported. But the market's 42 percent rise over the past three months has generated broad expectations of a pause — and even a desire for one among some analysis.

All the factors that have driven the market to seven months of record

"The market looks good in the very short term and in the long term," said Blair C. Pickerell, general manager of Jardine Fleming Taiwan Ltd. "But there has to be a correction somewhere in the middle distance." Everything that goes up must eventually come down, Mr. Pickerell and other analysts reason, especially when the ascent is as rapid as it has been here. But that old adage aside, there is not much to suggest that a substantial retreat is inevitable.

highs are still there. All the factors that have driven this market to seven straight months of record highs are still in place. Output is expected to expand by 8 percent this year, spring earnings reports have been excellent, and with a current price-to-earnings ratio of about 15, the market is far from overpriced. More to the point, speculative funds have poured into Taiwan since the new Taiwan dollar began appreciating against the U.S. currency last year, causing an explosive growth in foreign reserves. And while the national savings rate is now 38 percent, interest rates are at record lows.

Awash with cash, banks are refusing to take deposits. The only places to put the stuff are the stock market and real estate, which, as one economist said, has been a "dead investment" for years. Because the market is driven by excess liquidity, analysts say the stabilization of the exchange rate and the expected removal of exchange controls will determine the extent of a correction when

The market, which was closed Monday, ended a half-day session Saturday at 1,461.79, a fall of 16.87 points. Turnover was 5.94 billion new Taiwan dollars ($173.6 million) — not a record

The Taiwan Fund and the Formosa Fund, which is managed by Hoars Govett, the British stockbrökerage, are pacing the pack.

The more sluggish performer — which is still up 32 percent from last May — is the Taiwan (R.O.C.) Fund, largest of the four. Shares in the funds are difficult to acquire. The only one readily available to newcomers is the Taiwan Fund, which is traded on the American Stock Exchange. Its shares opened in December at $12.18 and shot to $39 before settling at $32 or so. That is still a premium of nearly 200 percent

By the end of this year, however, all four funds will also be operating adjunct "domestic" funds, which are limited to holders

$2.3 Billion Put On Nonaccrual

NEW YORK -- Chase Manhattan Corp. said Monday that it was placing $2.3 billion of mediumand long-term loans to horrowers in Brazil on nonaccrual status because of uncertainty about the resumption of interest payments. The action means Chase is essentially declaring the loans delinquent.

The action, retroactive to Jan. 1, will reduce first-quarter net income by about $31 million, Chase said. This amount includes the reversal of interest accrued in 1986 but not

Chase estimated that if no interest payments were made on these loans during the rest of 1987, the after-tax impact for 1987 would be about $120 million based on cur-

The banks, in placing the loans on nonaccrual status, or cash basis, will now account for interest payments only when they arrive, rather than when they are due.

Under U.S. banking law, banks must place loans on nonsecrual if payments of interest are past due 90 days or more.

Chase noted Monday that interest payments on many of the loans it was listing would not actually become past due by 90 days until the second and third quarters of

Debt Falls and Hopes Rise at Phillips But Oil Firm Faces Long Recovery From Takeover Bids

By Lee A. Daniels New York Times Service BARTLESVILLE, Oklahoma

Early last year the survival of Phillips Petroleum Co., the eighth-largest U.S. oil concern, seemed threatened by the crashing price of crude oil and by the legacy of its bruising struggle to defeat back-to-back takeover attempts: a mountainous $7 billion

Now, however, Phillips, the dominating presence in this com-munity of 36,000 just north of Tulsa, is not only alive but slowly staging a comeback.

To be sure, Phillips must still rebuild its decimated oil-exploration operations, even as it continues to liquidate itself. Last year its worldwide crude oil reserves fell 20 percent, to 718 million barrels, according to the company's annual report.

And with natural gas prices expected to remain depressed for the foreseeable future, it is unclear just how soon Phillips will be able to exploit its 5.1 trillion cubic feet (153 billion cubic meters) of natural gas reserves. Even so, concerns on Wail Street about Phillips's survival have diminished considerably.

An esprit de corps is apparent among executives and workers alike, despite cutbacks that have pared its payroll to 21,500, from 29,000, since 1984. And Phillips remains a significant force overseas, with operations in 11 countries, including the Norwegian sector of the North Sea and Nigeria.

"We wanted to be able to say that Phillips had this crisis forced upon it and handled it well," said James J. Mulva, Phillips's treasurer, speaking with in-tensity. "For us it was always a matter of how quickly could we come back and be competitive."

New York Times Service NEW YORK - The pilots' union of United Airlines, which has been at odds with management for some time, has made an offer to buy United from Allegis Corp. for $4.5 billion in cash, subordinated notes and assumed debt.

A source in the financial commu nity familiar with the situation said that while the pilots were expected to be able to raise the money they had not yet done so. The pilots said much of the money to fund the proposed transaction would come from their pension fund.

Since a strike last year, the pilots' union and United's management have often been at odds on how to improve productivity and cut costs in order to make the giant airline competitive with such emerging low-cost carriers as the Texas Air Corp., which owns Continental Airlines and Eastern Airlines.

Unlike other carriers, such as Trans World Airlines, which had heavy losses and which was taken over by Carl C. Icahn, the New York investor, with the help of two major TWA unions, United is strong financially despite some problems, and thus less vulnerable to takeover efforts.

SNECMA-GE Venture Proposes Airbus Engine

International Herald Tribune

PARIS—CFM International, a joint venture of SNECMA of France and General Electric Co. of the United States, has proposed a new engine to Airbus Industrie for use in its A-340 airliners, which could be ready for delivery when the proposed jets are to begin service in 1992, French government and industry sources said Monday.

The engine, which has the support of the French Ministry of Transport, would compete directly with the V-2500 Superfan engine being developed by International Aero Engines, a consortium of U.S., British, Japanese, West German and Italian engine makers.

The Superfun been the only engine offered so far on the A-340, but International Aero has not yet said whether it will be available when the aircraft are scheduled to enter service around

The French-U.S. project would be a more powerful version of the CFM-56-5 engine, currently being used in the A-320 Airbus, said a spokesman for SNECMA, or Societé Nationale d'Etude & de Construction de Moteurs d'Aviation, which is state-controlled, "One of its main advantages is that it will be available in 1992,"

Chunnel Share Sale Delayed

LONDON - Eurotunnel, the British-French consortium that is planning to build a railway tunnel under the English Channel, said Monday that it had postponed selling most of £750 million ($1.2 billion) worth of shares to the public until the fall.

· The consortium denied that the delay in the share sale - the second phase of a three-part, £6 billion financing for the project — was a sign of trouble.

The group said it would sell £75 million worth of stock in July and the remaining £675 million worth between Sept. 25 and Dec. 25. The eroup originally had planned to sell all that stock in July.

"We've given ourselves more and better selling time," he added. However, the group's board of directors suffered several defections in recent months, which some observers said undermined the consortium's ability to raise funds. Eurotunnel also assailed the railays - British Rail and France's SNCF — for failing to reach agreement with the consortium.

"The railway usage agreement is fundamental," André Benard and Alastair Morton, the group's cochairmen, said in a statement. #### Caesars World Unveils $1 Billion Plan to Resist Takeover

By Al Delugach

Los Angeles Times Service LOS ANGELES - Defending against a $28-a-share takeover bid, Caesars World Inc. has unveiled a $1 billion "recapitalization" in which it would pay shareholders a special cash dividend of $25 a

Shareholders of the Los Angeles based casino operator, whose stock is traded on the New York Stock Exchange, would still own their shares in the reorganized corporation, which would have a heavy debt load after the restructuring. There was no immediate reaction from Martin T. Sosnoff, who made the takeover offer March 9. It was valued at $725.2 million.

But in an April 3 mailgram to Henry Gluck, the Caesars chairman and chief executive, Mr. Sosnoff said he was prepared to offer a meaningful increase in his $28 pershare offer, Reuters reported Monday from New York.

IMr. Sosnoff also said he now has binding commitments from Marine Midland Banks Inc. for $500 million of acquisition financing, and Paine Webber Group Inc. had informed him that the placewas well under way.]

The recapitalization plan is subject to stockholder approval.

Mr. Sosnoff is the company's largest shareholder, with a 13.6 percent stake of the 30 million common shares outstanding Caesars said Sunday that it expected to finance the cash payout with about $200 million in bank borrowings and $800 million in junk bonds — high-risk, high-yield securities — to be sold by the investment firm Drexel Burnham

Despite a resulting "substantial deficit in stockholders' equity," management said that it had been advised by both Drexel Burnham and another investment banker, Bear, Stearns, that the reincorporated company, after recapitalization, "should have" the financial resources to cover its needs.

As part of a corporate restructur ing in the plan, 40 top management employees, including Mr. Gluck, would be rewarded with stock grants totaling 8 percent to 10 percent of Caesars World's shares. In a telephone interview from

The Supervisory Board of Banque de Gestion Privée-SIB met on Thursday 19, 1987 with Mr. Gérard Eskenazi as chairman. The purpose of that meeting was to examine the fiscal year 1986 results closed by the Board of Management presided over by Mr. Guy de Mailly Nesle, before their submission for approval to the Annual Meeting of Shareholders.

Let's recall that BGP and SIB merged on December 8, 1986 with effect as of January 1, 1986. The new bank was renamed Banque de Gestion Privee-SIR. The Board approved the results as of December 31, 1986, which was the first fiscal year of the new company.

Net profit after depreciation, reserves and taxes amounts to F.F. 81,065,526.97, representing a 44.3 percent increase over the cumulated net profits of both banks at the end of fiscal year 1985. The final result of the balance sheet amounts to F.F. 8,380,514,000 as of December 31, 1986 against F.F. 5,932,740,000 at the end of the

Shareholders equity before taxes has strongly increased from F.F. 231.438,000 before the merger to F.F. 507,689,000 as of December

Portfolios of securities also have gone up from F.F. 7,653,300,000 to F.F. 10,501,300,000 and new products (FCP-SICAV) have been developed and sold.

The merger, the adoption of new headquarters and the moving of the personnal into new offices were all major developments for the bank in 1986. It must be pointed out that these developments have had no negative effects on the activities of the bank, and that in addition the complementary nature of both companies has led to a considerable synergy in many fields of activities.

The new size of the bank, the strengthening of its financial and human structure, its belonging to a first class international group. Pargese-GBL - and the quality of its shareholders allow us to forecast major qualitative and quantitative developments in all the traditional fields of activities of the new company as well as in areas and markets where it intends to play a major role.

There were reports that the Bank of England had intervened in the early morning, above $1.62. These reports could not be confirmed but dealers said the sharp rise of British reserves last month showed that the bank did not besitate to sell sterling aggressively to counter upward

Silver Price Hits 2-Year High at London Fixing

LONDON - Silver prices rose Monday to levels not seen for nearly two years, dealers and analysts said. The price of silver bullion was fixed at $6.4990 an ounce in London on Monday morning, the highest level since late May 1985.

In the afternoon, silver trad ed a little lower in London, at $6.47 On the Commodity Exas people realized silver was undervalued with respect to platinum and gold," he said.

Foreign Securities Firms May Lose Out in Tokyo

TOKYO — Foreign securities firms are spending millions of dollars to set up opera-tions in Tokyo that industry sources say could in many cases lose money.

Thirty-six foreign banks and securities firms are already licensed to trade securities on the Tokyo Stock Exchange, the world's second largest after the New York Stock Exchange. More than 50 are expected to be trading by the end of the year.

But, as deregulation of the market erodes profits on securities transactions and if the global share buying spree of recent years tails off, only those with highly developed financial muscle or agility have a chance, the sources

"There will be foreigners' fallout. They come in here with too-glib ideas about how they can survive," said David Miller, director and general manager of the Tokyo branch of Jardine Fleming (Securities).

Despite soaring share values on the Tokyo market, sharp falls in commissions on stock transactions have hurt even those brokerage houses that came to Tokyo early. "Japanese equities are no longer a very prof-gains from the previous year.

But analysts say the figures do not disclose the costs of running an international brokerage in one of the world's most expensive cities. Compensation packages, with free housing, for novice analysts routinely run to more than $100,000 a year, and office rentals are in the millions of dollars.

"I'd he surprised if more than two or three were making money if they honestly accounted for their costs," said Mr. Miller, whose firm reported earnings of 1.4 billion yen for the six months ended Sept. 30, 1986.

To bring commissions closer to international rates, the Finance Ministry slashed fixed brokerage fees last year, especially on large-lot sactions. In a few years, all rates may be

Pennzoil insisted that Getty and Pennzoil had an agreement and that Texaco was aware of it.

Bartlesville: Company Town Stands Out in Oklahoma

BARTLESVILLE, Oklahoma - Phillips's presence has made this city - Oklahoma's seventh-largest and the site of its first oil well an anomalous community. It has only 36,000 residents and the city limits are a five-minute drive in any direction from the Phillips headquarters. But because of Phillips, the city's population has a disproportionate number of affluent, highly educated and highly skilled citizens: In Oklahoma, only the university towns of Norman and Stillwater have more residents with advanced degrees. One consequence is that its 6,500-student public-school system sends most of its graduates to college and it regularly produces a big erop of finalists in the competition for National Merit Scholarships. The 1,700-sent Bartlesville Community Center has a program that this season included the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, the Negro

Ensemble Company, the Vienna Choir Boys and Patti Page. Phillips's presence has also somewhat insulated Bartlesville from the hard times gripping Oklahoma, whose three basic industries—oil, agriculture and ranching—are in difficult straits.

Although the company reduced its headquarters staff to about 5,000, from 9,200 in 1981, much of that was done through early retirement and voluntary separation programs.

Phillips avoided Mr. Icaha's grasp by discarding its recapitalization plan a month later. The company replaced it with an offer to swap a $4.5 billion package of debt securities for about 50 percent of its shares outstanding, authorized the distribution of $300 million of a new preferred class of stock as an extra dividend on the remaining common shares and increased the annual stock dividend to $3 a share, from $2.35 a share.

Mr. Icahn, taking a profit of more than $50 million on his investment, pledged not to attempt a takeover of Phillips for eight years.

But Phillips was left with a crushing debt load made all the more onerous by plunging oil prices. As a result, Phillips's carnings in 1986 dropped 45 percent, to $228 million, or 89 cents a share.

STARING AT THE SUN

By Julian Barnes. 197 pages. $15.95. Alfred A: Knopf, 201 East 50th Street, New York, N. Y. 10022.

Reviewed by Christopher Lehmann-Haupt

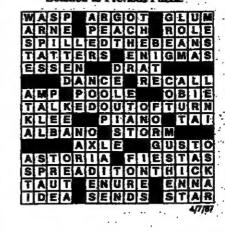

ONE has come to expect extreme forms of narrative sleight of hand from the English novelist Julian Barnes. In his highly original "Flaubert's Parrot" (1985), he wrote about a man obsessed with Gustave Flaubert, and by encyclopedically evoking the great French novelist and identifying himself with the busband of Madame Bovary, the author managed almost to become Flaubert.

So it comes as a slight surprise that Barnes's latest novel, "Staring at the Sun," is a relatively straightforward marrative about a lower-middie class Englishwoman named Jean Serjeant who lives from the 1920s into the 2020s. To borrow the story's central metaphor, it traces her life from sunrise to sunset.

Yet if this new book lacks the artistic trickiness of its predecessors, there is a quieter game being played in its pages. That game lies in the language, with words and phrases echoing un-sically throughout the novel until the homeliest of phrases is raised up to a kind of poetry. Thus the expression "staring at the sun" begins by referring to what an RAF fighter pilot does when he is flying east at the crack of dawn, and ends up meaning the contemplation of deaths.

The medium of this language is Jean Serjeant, whom we first meet as a 7 year old, wondering why the potted hyacinth sprouts her uncle Leslie has given her for Christmas are refusing to grow. The opposite of Emma Bovery, she lacks all sense of romance, and envery the lacks all sense of romance, and envery the lacks all sense of romance. dures so long that her son grows old before her cyes, and memories race "across her sky like Irish weather."

Every person in the book relates to Jean: her mother, who wants her to throw out the hyacinths; her father, who takes her up in a plane to cure her whooping cough; her Uncle Leslie, who plays golf with her; her husband, Michael, who bullies her until she finally leaves him after 20 years of marriage; her son, Gregory, who goes on living near her into his old age; her son's friend Rachel, who wants to sleep with her, and Tommy Prosser, the RAF pilot who a first tells her about staring into the sum.

And every word relates to Jean, who like the And every word relates to Jean, who like the young Stephen Dedahus likes to think about language until it yields up all its hidden meanings. She thinks about how the pilot denorabed flying at night: The instrument lights "have to be red — red's the only color that works," he says. "So you see, it's all black and red up there." Later her son, Gregory, contemplating God and death, recalls Pascal's description of belief as being a wager: "If you didn't bet, you couldn't win. Put your money on red, put your money on black — there were only two money on black — there were only two choices." Will Jean Serjeant choose red or black? we are made to wonder.

Some of Barnes' wordplay is amusing, like Jean's question to her father "about this new woman prime' minister of Austria called Airs, Schluss," or the graffito that the leshian Rachel. cites: "Three wise men — are you serious?". Some of it gets tedious, like Gregory's debates with himself over "the God question." In fact, as Jean and Gregory move deeper into the 21st century, the novel itself bogs down a bit.

Leonard-Hagler Bout Should Erase Some Question Marks

By Shirley Povich New York Times Sernee LAS VEGAS -- It was two years ago in

Bob Martin. Vegas's supreme odds authority, defined the betting action in his own lascinating idiom: "They go to a supreme the was a knockout in the was only a survivor. No Leonard flash, no dazzle. He was a winner, but in the worst fight of his procareer. That Leonard had no business in 5 and sometimes even money. bed at night thinking Hagler and wake the ring with Hagler.

Leonard fight, there was no such indecision. The conviction was firm that Hagler would win. He was holding up as the speed and stamina of his invincible years, plus the pounds of punch he has Ray Leonard home a beaten challenger.

. That would seem to be quite proper in the case of a great middleweight champion who has not been beaten in II years, although there still had to be some misgivings about those odds. Leonard, too, can ht well. He isn't your ordinary target; he thought he could beat Hagler, and he'd been right on 33 of the 34 occasions he had stepped into a professional ring.

A fix on Leonard and his chances would probably be available to everyone in the early minutes of the fight. If he came out as the same cautious, wary Leonard who answered the bell in his 1984 comeback fight against Kevin usually a grudging concession to some Howard, overly defensive and obviously lead-footed overweight oaf. But there is

It was a strange Leonard who suffered this town that Marvelous Marvin Hagler's a confidence crisis against Howard and walked into a right hand that put him down for the first time in his life, floored fight? So menacing was Hearns that by a comparative punk. To his credit he pulled it out with a knockout in the

On the eve of Monday night's Hagler-Leonard fight, there was no such indecitured all the strength, all the moves and s, plus the pounds of punch he has added by going from 147-pounder (66.6 kilograms) to middleweight for this fight. Could he be believed?

There was irony in the fight films shown incessantly on the Vegas hotel screens, repeats of the principals' fights with Hearns. Leonard is seen dealing Hearns fiercer punishment than did Hagler, even allowing for the shorter distance Hearns went with Hagler, When he got Hearns in trouble, Leonard appeared at least as murderous as Hagler, maybe more so.

It is rarely said of a smaller man that he has "a puncher's chance." That is concerned about his once-damaged reti-added irony here: Leonard can snap off punch knockouts are in his resume, and no less than Hagler he is a finisher when scenting the time for the kill.

But for this fight the rub was that the exact state of Leonard's physical equip-ment and his mind-set was unverifiable. The naysayers pointed out he has fought Hagler's credentials are imposing. How has retirement affected Leon-None of the last 37 opponents he faced ard's punching speed? Listen to the orig-

fierce as he looks with his shaven skull. He is a switch-hitting ruffian who, one way or another, figured to bring Leonard down, I don't like the word awesome because it's overused. But Hagler is awesome.

So there, Hagler has been given his due. But he does have some flaws. He can be hit. Everybody he fights knows he is a target. John Mugabi whacked him hard and frequently in their March 1986 bout until Hagler walked through what Mugabi was throwing and stopped him in 11. And Hearns speared him often until Hearns's untimely finish in three.

And Hagler can bleed. Mugabi opened him up badly and so did Hearns. His handlers explain that in each case it was from a butt or an elbow, but listeners get weary of that line. There must have been some punch damage sometime.

In every fight, Hagler uses one favorite tactic to advantage, his switch from left-hander to right-hander in subtle moves that catch opponents unaware. He is a natural lefty who fights that way 60 percent of the time, exposing oppo-"To rest is to rust: If you don't use it you nents to a right jab that is a jolter. Even lose it." A bothersome thing for Leonard's friends was his dreary workout Thursday, when he appeared oddly uninterested and absorbed some big shots from his sparring partners. Was it weariness with the whole business? A crisis of confidence? Or. with Hagler's spies on the scene, was Leonard being coy, playing possum in a public workout? He would not be above it.

Leonard does have more moves than Hagler and lays store by what he calls his "lateral movement." Perhaps he betrayed his game plan the other day when he said, "I'll make Hagler think twice." He would do anything and everything to frustrate Hagier, much as old pro Roberto Duran did in November 1983.

Leonard (who was there as a television commentator) saw a puffed-up, overthe-hill Duran con Hagler and culf him around in a fight that went the limit. Leonard, too, has tricks, and perhaps it was Hagler-Duran that was a factor in bringing him out of retirement with GREENSBORO, North Carolina (AP) - Scott Simpson held off back-nine charges by several challengers to break a three-year victory drought with a two-shot triumph Sunday in the Greensboro Open golf tournament Sunday.

Simpson shot a 2-under-par 70 that included birdies on two of his last four holes for a four-day total of 282, 6-under. It was his first victory since the 1984 Westchester Classic and his third in nine years on the PGA tour.

Jacques Prévert: The Poet Remembered

INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE, TUESDAY, APRIL 7, 1987

By Cynthia Guttman International Herald Tribune D ARIS — "A minute of spring

/ often lasts longer / than an hour of December / a week of October / a year of July / a month of February," wrote Jacques Pre-vert of his favorite season in "Le Grand Bal du Printemps." This spring, to mark the 10th anniversary of Prevert's death on April 11, artists, writers and friends are discreetly honoring the poet who despised official ceremonies and confided toward the end of his life, that "the child that I was, I kept his tears. And I kept his smile. And his happy secrets."

Prévert's childhood began with the century in the suburb of Nearlly, became closely allied with the Surrealists in the 1920s, and continued through an intense filmmaking period with Marcel Carne on the eve of and during World War II. After 1945, Prévert produced several volumes of poetry (some of that was translated into 79 languages) and a collec-tion of 200 collages, and continued his collaboration with artists - notably Georges Braque, Pab-lo Picasso, Joan Miró and Alexander Calder - and photographers, including Izis, Brassaï, Andre Villers and Robert Dois-

The essential, I think is to tell a story," said Prévert. "I tell a story. We talk about an image in poetic terms. You can do it with cissors, with a knife, with anything. For me, you know, written poetry, spoken poetry, filmed poetry, it has always been the same.

"He did not want to consider himself a poet, but a creator of images and a recreator of lan-guage," said Danièle Gasiglia-Laster, author of the first fulllength biography of Prèvert (1986), a richly-illustrated album. A varitable Prèvert festival is to be held in July at the Maeght Foundation in Saint-Paul-de-Vence. It will feature Prévert's collages, many manuscripts and letters, and film masterpieces written by Prévert such as "Drôle de Drame" (1937), "Quai des Brumes" (1938), "Les Visiteurs du Soir" (1942) and "Les Enfants du Paradis" (1945). The Galerie Maeght's ties with Prévert date to the 1950s when Adrien Maeght

first exhibited his collages.

Jacques Prévert in 1941 at Tourettes-sur-Loup, and in 1968.

More recently, two admirers of Prévert, Jacques Khatchikian and Daniel Lasnon, associate partners of the Galerie des Indépendants on the Place des Vosges in Paris, obtained permission to reproduce a limited series of four collages. The engravings, with their fairytale sense of enchantment, fully preserve the vivid colors, finesse and raised design of the originals. The collages will later travel to Quebec and New York.

Prevert's first collage, dated 1943, shows a photograph of his wife. Janine, leaping on clouds as a bird with open wings, framed by a wreath of leaves cut from botanical plates. It hung over the entrance to his study, opposite a portrait of him painted by Picas-so. Not all his collages were to express as euphoric an emotion. Many are cruel and terrifying. What all share is the poet's visual sense of staging characters in a decor and the pervasive influence of Surrealism.

A noted Bohemian throughout the 1920s and 1930s, Prévert shared quarters with the Surrealists from 1925-1928. In the old house of the Rue du Château reigned an absolute nonconformism, a total irreverence and also a beautiful humor," he later mans who offered Prévert and recalled. Participating in the Sur-realists' debates, Prevert was as much affected by their creativity as by their ideological conflicts.

He left the group with a viru-lent, incisive pamphlet entitled "A Corpse" denouncing André Breton's intolerance and orthodoxy with witry eloquence. But the period's free thinking and unconventionality remained a cor-nerstone of Prevert's work. In the early 1930s he associated with the Groupe Octobre, a political the ater troupe of workers and intellectuals aiming at a popular, pro-letarian audience. Prévert wrote their plays, a collaboration that culminated in a trip to Moscow in 1933 to attend "The Olympiads of the Working Theater." Their play, "La Bataille de Fontenoy," earned the first prize.

Prévert always denounced authority, but refused to join a political party. "His behavior was one of a free man, anti-conventional. social in the true sense of the word. He was a man who was in love with life," said Alexandre Trauner, who designed the decor for the major films Carné directed and Prévert wrote. To the Ger-

Carné the financial backing to make a grand-scale production, Prevert responded, "No, because you haven't got the Jews with

Though it had won first prize at the Venice Film Festival, "Quai des Brumes" also emaged German and Italian officials, who walked out of the theater. Not surprisingly, perhaps: "The film was the apology of a deserter," Trauner said.

Subsequent films held a more romanticized, mysterious tone. "During the war and the Occupation, we could not make a film based on current happenings be-cause it would automatically be denounced," Trauner said. "So we found ourselves making films with the use of fairy tales, angels and devils to escape from the immediate reality." The allegories, interpreted by Arletty, Jean Gabin, Michèle Morgan, Pierre Brasseur and others, invariably honor love. Prevert said in the 1960s, "Whether it is in film or other, all that interests me is love. You can tell in my films. I love women, and prefer them to men. As one says, they have le beau role."

It was not until 1945 that the first collection of Prevert's poems, "Paroles" (Lyrics) was published. René Bertelé gathered poems previously published in literary reviews, given to friends or kept by Prévert. It sold 5,000 copies in its first week. The title reflects the poet's primary vocation as a dexterous manipulator of language. His poems read as musical conversations. The language is direct and simple. He was enamored of words, word games, people and the city. "We laughed a lot, and we fought a lot. Trauner said. Friends remember his generosity and sense of fun, the endless nights dominated by his soliloquies, rich in humor and lyrical virtuosity, touching on every subject. Always provocative, outspoken, elegant, eternally smoking, he would be bubbling with "36 ideas at the same time, and be able to show the absurd side of everything that was taken as fact," recalled Doisneau.

It was during the 1950s that Prevert sealed close friendships with Miró and Calder, and began to write poems to illustrate their

There were long, animated nights in St. Germain-des-Près, and then the days of strolling, looking, listening. "In the streets of the city, I found my grass of pleasure," he said.

Prevent strolled, often accompanied by Doisneau. "There are things in the street that no one sees any more because they have been there forever and become forgotten," Doisneau said. "Privert would rediscover the odd beauty of certain things in the street - an old bike chained to a 1900 Metro entrance. It was the same for words. He loved the names of certain streets. The game was made up of verbs and words whose real meaning and hidden beauty had been forgot-

When Doisneau recently received a letter from a friend of Prévert's wife, asking him il he would like to plant a tree in memory of Jacques, Doisneau, se-duced by the idea, concluded: "I would plant a lime tree, because it is always surrounded by bees buzzing around it." Gesturing in the air, he added, "He never seemed to be working; he was always surrounded by people."
